THE PINE NEEDLE – September 2022

A Note from the Pastor

In 1882, the Central Labor Union of New York City wanted to create “a day off for the working citizen.” The idea caught on and in 1894 Labor Day became a federal holiday. According to the US Department of Labor, the day is a “tribute to the contributions workers have made to the strength, prosperity, and well-being of our country.”

However, I suspect that over Labor Day weekend most of us, instead of contemplating the contributions of workers, did everything we could to forget about work. Instead, we enjoyed the last few hours of summer as we sat around our picnic tables daydreaming about how nice life would be if we didn’t have to work.

I don’t want to be a wet blanket and make you feel guilty for enjoying a long weekend, but I do want to remind you that while a day off is nice (and necessary!), there is something good about work. Genesis 2:15 tells us that “The Lord God took the man and put him in the Garden to work it and take care of it.” Work is part of the goodness of God’s creation. The Garden was not a place where Adam and Eve sat around all day eating fruit; instead, it was the place God put them to work. In fact, some might argue that work is one of the ways Adam and Eve live out the image of God (after all no other creature is specifically placed in the garden and given a job to do).

Work is a way we become partners with God in creation. God does the creating and we do the caring. God does the heavy lifting of bringing things into existence and then it’s up to us to nurture, protect and preserve them. This is a good thing. It’s not until after Adam and Eve are disobedient that work becomes a curse. It’s only after Adam and Eve drive a wedge between themselves and God that work is drained of its goodness.

It may be too late to change the plans you’ve put in place to celebrate Labor Day on Sept 5th, but it’s not too late to change your mind about what happens when you return to work. What if instead of viewing your job as a curse, you viewed it as a gift? What if instead of working for a living, you decided to view your work as participation with God? What if instead of looking for a paycheck, you looked for God’s goodness? Imagine 8 hours a day spent in God’s presence, experiencing his blessing, partnering in his creation. What could happen if we viewed our jobs not as a place we had to go, but as somewhere we were placed by God?

You may think it strange, but as I type this, I have a Christmas song running through my head. The second verse of Joy to the World, says “[Christ] comes to make his blessings known, far as the curse is found.” I think that includes our jobs. So take a day off, grill a burger or two, but on Tuesday, return to work determined to make Christ’s blessings known.

Grace and Peace,

Pastor James
